Yesterday afternoon employees of the Essex Passenger Railway Company removed the overhead wires formerly used by the horse-car company in running the electric cars. The manner of taking down the wires was by fastening them to a truck and pulling until something gave away. The iron bars projecting from the poles fell around promiscuously, endangering the lives of passers-by. It seems that corporations can do about as they please in Bloomfield without hindrance.

Miss Kate Doyle was run down by a team drawing an ice wagon at Broad and Clark Streets, Newark, Monday afternoon, and almost instantly killed. She was crossing Clark Street, on her way home when the ice wagon came down that street at great speed. Before she could escape the pole of the wagon struck her in the breast, knocking her down, and then one of the big horses stepped upon her breast. There were two men on the wagon. The driver, when he saw what had happened, sprang from the wagon, lifted her up and then went away. Miss Doyle was carried to the office of Dr. William A. Smith, where electricity was tried, but she died in a few minutes. Her spine was broken.

Phil Kearny Council, N. P. U., Celebrates.

It has been a time-honored custom of this council to celebrate Independence Day by a dinner on the evening previous. Last Friday evening the banquet was held at the American House, and was one of the most enjoyable events at which we have ever been present. The dining room had been festooned with the national emblems and Chinese lanterns suspended from the ceiling, making the place brilliant and bright. The festivities were confined to the members of the council, with the exception that the Town Committee and that pre-eminent and most distinguished citizen, the Hon. John F. Dillon, were invited. The Honorable Chairman of the Town Committee, Seymour P. Gilbert, Edwin A. Rayner, Charles H. Halfpenny and the "Only Dillon" were present as guests, and about twenty members of the Council. Mr. Gilbert presided at the head of the table. S. G. Hayter acted as toastmaster, and gave as the first toast "The heroes of 1776, who made it possible to have a Republic," to which sentiment C. H. Halfpenny was called upon to respond, which he did in a most eloquent manner, calling forth hearty applause. The next sentiment was "The heroism of the period of 1861–1865, which preserved to us a nation," to which Capt. Charles A. Clark responded so modestly and feelingly as to elicit admiration. Comrades are apt at times to toot the horn so loud in their own praise as to cause an involuntary smile.

"The patriots of 1891 (and particularly those of Bloomfield), who appreciated the sacrifices of the Sons of Liberty who gave birth to the nation so grand, and the manhood of 1861, who made it in reality the home of the brave and the free," was responded to by E. A. Rayner, who showed a remarkable familiarity with the history not only of the nation, but of the world. "Bloomfield: the garden spot of New Jersey; its natural surroundings, furnishing a paradise as an abode for all who come within its borders, and having as its citizens men of education, endowed with the spirit of patriotism whose influence was as extensive as the rays of the sun." S. P. Gilbert, Chairman of the Town Committee, arose to speak to this toast, and regretted that time would not permit him to do full justice to the subject, but said that he had very much love and admiration for the town of Bloomfield, which in the war of the revolution had furnished her full quota of men, and in the last war had not been any laggard, as the tombstones in the cemetery silently told the story of her patriotism. Otto J. Schortau was called upon to speak on the subject of "They are governed, but who are governed least," and handled the subject "without gloves" from a personal point of view which presented it in an entirely new phase. The motto of the National Provident Union is "Our Homes and Our Country," and after Mr. Hayter had explained the objects of the N. P. U. in a short address, which did not take over two hours, he called upon Mr. Dillon, who had forgotten the subject, but was gradually brought back to where he could grasp it. He handled "Our Homes and Our Country" in a way that showed at once that he never had been an auctioneer or even a real-estate agent. As he rose equal to the occasion and drew such a grand and beautiful picture of a home as it should be, his pathos was such that there was no resisting it, and the sable head waiter, who was in attendance upon the guests, was seen to lean his head upon his hand and weep. He (not the waiter, but Dillon) drew visions of Bloomfield in the near future, which was grand and fair.

"Our Homes," said he, "shall extend—yes they shall extend until they shall take in not only Montclair and Newark, but even Fairview, with its miles and miles of well paved avenues, lined on either side with the grand palaces, the homes of its citizens so modest but in whose frontlets glitter the most precious of stones, and at whose feet shall sit the people of the world to learn lessons in wisdom," etc. He soared from height to height, and had got as far as Glen Ridge, when our pencil point broke—so we could not follow him any further.

Patriotic songs were sung and speeches were made by almost all who were present. Stories were told—some that were true and a few that were not—and the exercises were prolonged until morning and would have been continued longer, had not the toastmaster remembered that he had the flag to raise upon the liberty pole on the green at sunrise abruptly bringing the exercises to a close so that he might reach the park in time for the flag-raising.

The affair passed off very pleasantly and reflected great credit upon all. As everything was informal there were no set speeches and no one had had any preparation, not knowing what subject they should be called upon to speak on. Such impromptu affairs show the natural ability of the American citizen to great advantage.

It Didn't Take a Tumble.

As the evening salute was fired upon the green July 4, quite a few people gathered upon the corner watching the church edifice that "the wee gun" was to shake from its solid foundations. The Commander of Pierson Post stood within its walls prepared to be entombed, but came out unscathed as there was not a quiver which could have been felt by any one.
